Why use outdoor adventure in corporate trainings?

"Training in a new and safe learning environment lets us sense, opt and make decisions exclusive of the real life consequences associated with our work. This space allocates the experimentation and aids full development of team and individual potential."

- 1 Learning is maximized in situations requiring teams and individuals to make critical decisions and valued judgments. Potentially challenging adventure activities encourages us to assume responsibility for ourselves, team members and the consequences of any judgments or decisions we may have made.
- 2 Problem solving and facing new challenges involves many different learning styles and allows teams and individuals to recognize their strengths and weaknesses.
- 3 Facing stress and anxiety in a supportive environment can lead to a feeling of greater unity and understanding within a team. Respect and compassion for self and others is also developed.
- 4 Discovering new skills and strengths may empower a team or individual and open up new decision making options for the future. Success and support breeds optimism and heightens expectations of what a team or person can do.
- 5 Adventure activities are extremely fun filled and lead to a greater appreciation of the physical environment. They can be seen as character building, but any possible 'make or break' scenario or negative experience, is totally unacceptable in adventure training.
- 6 An intense, unforgettable experience will aid long term retention of any learning.
- 7 We learn more when we are having fun.
- 8 Adventure activities are 'learning by experience'
